A Remi distract.

During the month of Dec mber, 186 a quartette of young men, armed will shot guns, and amply supplied with ammunition, started out of town in search of game. At that time Culpuper was almost surrounded by heavy forests of oak and pine; game was much more plentiful than now, and the distance one had to walk was inthe distance one had to wank was medignificant as compared with the preent day. A slight snow had fallen, the air was crisp and cold and our party, full of hope, with visions of squirrel, rabbits and partridges, each provided with a game bag struck out over the hills. After wandering around for several hours, covering perhaps five or six miles, they finally brought up near the barn of Capt. Samuel Rixey, about four miles north of town, without having sighted any game, and feeling the e-fects of their long walk sat down to rest, when one of the party espied a fleat of Cartain Rixey's turkeys in the flock of Captain Rixey's turkeys in the barn yard, and motioning to his companions to keep quiet, crept up to the fence and selecting with a great deal of deliber. tion a fice hen, leveled his piece and fred away. As soon as the smoke dis-appeared and it was discovered that his aim had been acurate, it was but the work of a moneut to nou it the fence and secure the game, when the whole party made for the woods, and after resching a point where they felt secure from discovery, the turky's red head was cut off, the feathers picked from his body, they marched triumphantly back to town and exhibited a wild (?) turkey hen to their friends as the re-sult of the evening's hont. It will sult of the evening's hunt. It wis turned over to im Field, an old color- preparations constantly on hand. ed man who kept an oyster saloon, at d that night a joily party was assemble d around the table and feasting on Capt Rivey's turkey, all agreeing that the flavor of a wild (2) turkey was greatly superior to that of the domestic. One of the quarette who participated in the adventure was no less a person than the present distinguished speaker of the House of Payramulative the of the House of Representatives, the Hon, Charles F. Crisp, who was then a youth of sixteen.—Culpeper Enterprise.
